Trailblazing Jockey Crump Dies at Age 77

Diane Crump, the pioneering Thoroughbred jockey whose riding breakthroughs set the stage for generations of female riders, died Jan. 1 at an inpatient hospice facility in Winchester, Va. She was 77.

Crump, involved with horses from her youth until the final months of her life, was best known for becoming the first woman to compete as a licensed jockey at a United States racetrack when she rode Bridle 'n Bit in a race Feb. 7, 1969, at Hialeah Park in South Florida.

"It always impacted me, being the first female jockey," Crump said during a 2017 interview with America's Best Racing. "I have one little footprint in history that turned a corner not just for women's rights, but equal rights."

By G.S. Thompson

Looking back over my 50-year career in horse racing from water-bucket carrier to groom to trainer to writer, I've met some pretty darn good horses, some of which were the best in the world, but every one of them had something special about them.

I missed seeing the mighty Secretariat in person, but I did get to meet Seattle Slew and Cigar, among other greats, a few of whom graced us at Assiniboia Downs.

Canadian champion Escape Clause was the best female I ever met at the Downs, and her coming-back-at-the-wire nose defeat to the best mare in the world, Midnight Bisou, in the 2019 Apple Blossom

Handicap \(G1\) at Oaklawn Park, makes her the best Manitoba-bred of all time.

Congratulations to breeders Cam Ziprick and Arnason Farms, owners Barry Arnason and True North, and trainer Don Schnell, for an amazing accomplishment.

Escape Clause (inside) and Midnight Bisou at the wire in the 2019 Apple Blossom Handicap. (Coady Photography)

Interestingly, Escape Clause wasn't the quickest horse I ever met at the Downs. That honour belongs to One More Lady, who won eight stakes here from 1984-1989. But that's not where I caught her tailwind.

I was at the rail near the three-eighths pole one morning when she was working a half-mile for trainer Tommy Elias. When she got to the turn, I thought the jockey might jump off. She was moving heavy and extremely fast. I didn't think she would make the turn, but she did, and her supposed 48-second work was more like 44 seconds, or less. I'm pretty sure she went half a mile in 43 2/5 in a race one day at the Downs, but those charts aren't readily available anymore. And she probably had faster in her.

The best horse I ever met at the Downs was Overskate, who won the 1978 Manitoba Derby by a zillion lengths while bent in half and set a new track record for 1 1/8-miles. Peggy's Choice finished second in the race for trainer Don Gray, and I was in the test barn with that horse and Overskate. He wasn't a big horse, and some said he weighed in at only 850 pounds. Most of it was heart.

The 7-time Canadian champion also won numerous graded stakes in the United States and set a new track record going 1 3/8-miles on the turf at Belmont Park in the Bowling Green Handicap.

Cigar in the midst of his 16-race winning streak at Belmont Park in 1995. (Barbara D. Livingston)

Cigar holds a special place in my heart, as I was able to cover him for a full week at the Breeders' Cup in 1995, in the midst of his perfect season and his 16-race win streak. Trainer Bill Mott and his crew were especially kind to me, and on many mornings, I was the only reporter at the barn, so I got to know Cigar better than most outsiders.

I was standing by the walking ring outside Mott's barn one morning with Cigar's jockey Jerry Bailey and I asked him what it was like to ride such an incredible horse. Cigar was on the other side of the walking ring, about 50 yards away, when Bailey said, "Watch this." "Hey buddy," he called out to Cigar. Cigar stopped and looked right at him. They were brothers.

While Secretariat may have been the Bobby Orr of the breed and the most talented thoroughbred ever to look through a bridle, and Cigar might be considered a thoroughbred version of Sydney Crosby, Seattle Slew was probably the best horse I ever saw up close.

He was like a combination of 7-time Super Bowl champion Tom Brady and Hall of Fame linebacker Lawrence Taylor.

Taylor was described as one of the most feared and intimidating players in NFL history. His explosive speed and power is credited with changing the outside linebacker position from one of read-and-react to aggression and attack. (Wikipedia). Intimidating and explosive was Seattle Slew.

I was at the paddock on November 11, 1978, when Seattle Slew took on four rivals in the final start of his career, the Stuyvesant Handicap (G3) at Aqueduct. The only undefeated Triple Crown winner in history was heavily favoured to win, but he was sopping wet in the paddock, and he was acting like a crazy, fire-breathing dragon.

I thought, 'how could he possibly win in that condition after expending so much of his physical and mental energy in the paddock.' I bet against him. Mistake.

Slew took the lead out of the gate and never looked back. They were NEVER going to beat him. Seattle Slew won the first nine starts of his career including the Kentucky Derby (G1), Preakness (G1), and Belmont Stakes (G1), and finished his career with a record of 14-2-0 from 17 starts. When he lost, he had major excuses.

Seattle Slew winning the 1977 Kentucky Derby. (Tony Leonard)

In the Life and Death of Seattle Slew, Hall of Fame scribe Steve Haskin described Slew as "something wild and beautiful. On the track, he could be as swift and lethal as a falcon in a dive or soar as gracefully as an egret on gossamer wings. He was, in every sense of the word, a Thoroughbred."

Many hardcore horse people, from breeders and bettors to jockeys and trainers, thought the performance that summed Seattle Slew up best was his neck loss to Exeller in the 1978 Jockey Club Gold Cup \(G1\), when he dueled fellow Triple Crown winner Affirmed into submission after a half mile in 45 1/5 and six furlongs in 1:09 2/5, opened up, was caught by Exeller late on the sweeping Belmont turn, dueled with that one to the sixteenth pole, appeared to be put away, and then came back gamely in the last 100 yards to lose by a neck. Read more here: Exeller, Seattle Slew Gold Cup Battle Among the Best Ever.

There were other special horses I was privileged to groom or spend time with while working for trainers like Woody Stephens, Charlie Whittingham, Allen Jerkens, and Roger Attfield, or writing about them. Champions, superstars, and graded stakes winners that included White Star Line, Terpsichorist, Sensational, Sir Lad, Inkerman, Balzac, Amazer, Devil His Due, Sky Beauty, and Peteski, but one stood out as the best of the best, for me.

Seattle Slew.

He could be your horse, too.

Rams over Panthers (Saturday afternoon): Well, even though they lost last week to the Bucs, the Panthers still find themselves in the playoff tournament thanks to the Atlanta Falcons' victory over the New Orleans Saints. The Panthers, Bucs, and Saints all had the same 8–9 record, but the Panthers had the better record within the division, so they took the NFC South crown. Now they will host the Los Angeles Rams, a team they surprisingly beat during the regular season. I don't see a repeat of that happening. Even though the Rams aren't quite the juggernaut they were during the middle part of the year, offensively they should be able to outplay the Panthers' defence.

Packers over Bears (Saturday night): One of the NFL's longest-standing rivalries will write another chapter on Saturday night when the #2-seeded Chicago Bears host the Green Bay Packers. Both teams are coming off losses last week (although the Packers didn't play any of their starters against the Vikings), so I'm sure nothing will give either team more pleasure than eliminating their foe from the playoffs. Packers quarterback Jordan Love is good to go after missing the last few games with a concussion. It took some very late-game heroics from Caleb Williams in their Week 16 matchup to get the victory for the Bears. Since then, they've actually lost back-to-back games in the final minute of play. Green Bay should learn from their past mistakes and put the hammer down if they gain a lead, and not let the Bears creep back into it.

Eagles over 49ers (Sunday afternoon): It pains my soul to do this, but I have to pick against my team this weekend, sadly. Seattle manhandled the 49ers last week. Their defence shut down Christian McCaffrey, holding him to only 23 rushing yards, and Brock Purdy was under siege the entire time. With that loss, San Fran fell to the 6th seed in the NFC and now has probably the worst matchup they could have hoped for. The Eagles' defence is always a fierce bunch to deal with, especially up front, so the Niners' already shaky offensive line will once again have its work cut out. If, by some measure, San Fran manages to get their offence going, I don't know how they will slow down the Eagles' offence. The Niners are so injured on defence right now that the backups to the backups are hurt, and they have signed guys off the street and inserted them into the starting lineup just to have enough capable bodies to play. It makes me very sad, because they dealt with a lot of adversity all year and, despite all of it, managed to overachieve and get to the playoffs.

Last week: 0–3

Season overall: 33–21
